Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Teachers Account of an American soldier who was killed in France. * * * * * An excerpt from the beginning: One day in October, 1918, an American soldier sat in a "little pit" in a wood, writing a letter home. The principal thesis of his letter was jam, cited as "one of the most vital topics about camp now." There was also a good deal about a cup of apple sauce, lately given him by a princely comrade; the repairing of trousers with the aid of a housewife, also a recent gift; wool socks, rainy weather and the prospect of billets; something of small happenings at home. In concluding, the soldier apologized for the material thinness of his letter, saying: "Our days are uneventful, and there is nothing much to say." The "little pit" which the writer mentioned was an improvised dug-out. The "wood" he referred to flanked the Argonne Forest. The uneventful days were the days of the American offensive of September-November last: the colossal and terrible operation of our armies on the Meuse which, if Marshal Foch's word is worth anything, "broke the Boche's back," and which history is likely to record as one of the great decisive battles of all time. Soldiers' letters home come pitched in many keys. Much news, and that the most important, is beyond the censor's reach. We read mainly soldier-letters and, occasionally, letters that are not so mainly; letters buoyant and depressed, imaginative and prosaic, gushing and reserved; letters which are full of unconscious courage and abnegation, and letters happily few in number which show the catastrophe of the world conceived as but...
