Excerpt: . . . GRATITUDE; LOVE; LIFE SEPTEMBER GRATITUDE WITHOUT knowing the final goal, we cannot take the first step toward it--at least consciously; and so, for the satisfactory work of teachers, I shall give an outline of the thought on which this series of lessons is based. Three facts must be borne in mind: First, that spiritual truth in the abstract is beyond a little child's comprehension; second, he must experience something of what is given him, or it is of little value; third, he sees in creation the embodied thoughts of God. Above all, our work is to cultivate religious feelings and desires rather than religious ideas. The underlying aim in the lessons of the next three months is to develop a feeling of gratitude. Some one has said that in the present time the grateful spirit is the rare one; and yet gratitude is the foundation stone of reverence and of love. Children cannot be forced to thanksgiving. It must be a voluntary feeling, and then expression will be the natural outcome. We must start with what is nearest to them. And with their power of personification, a close sympathy with nature is always found. So they are here led to--1st. Gratitude to the lower creation. 2d. Gratitude to Man. 3d. Gratitude to the heavenly Father. While working for this, the fruitage of labor and the interdependence of will be felt by the children, if the teacher sees these truths herself. Reverence for the least...
