Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Education in Americanism Shall we teach law in the primary schools? Now do not smile. I am intensely in earnest. A few months ago, I was riding in a car in a neighboring city. Two men, evidently from the middle walk of life, were sitting behind me, and I could not help hearing the following conversation: Well, I see they arrested Bill for stealing a couple of hams; to which his companion responded: Yes, and I suppose he will go to prison; if he was a rich guy, there wouldn't be any danger, but a poor devil don't stand no show in the Courts. The other agreed with him, and they proceeded to discuss the subject and to cuss the Courts. I wanted to turn around and tell them they were gravely mistaken; I wanted to explain to them that the statement we often hear quoted, If a man steals a loaf, he goes to prison, and if he steals a railroad he goes to the United States Senate, is a gross exaggeration,...
