With the highest income tax rate now 45, and a maximum effective tax rate on dividends of 30. 55, any planning opportunities to reduce this can be very attractive. In this guide we look at precisely how UK and foreign dividends are taxed before covering some of the key tax planning opportunities available. One of the simplest and most effective ways to avoid or reduce income tax on dividends is to spread the income amongst your Spouse or Children. This is fully covered in this guide. Investing in equities via an ISA can also be highly attractive, as can using EIS and VCT investments to reduce income tax. Non UK domiciliaries have a number of options and their tax treatment differs from other UK residents when they receive foreign dividends. All of these issues, and more are covered in this guide. Contents include: How Dividends Are Taxed This includes a detailed explanation of how income tax applies to dividends, gross and net dividends, the 19 tax credit and how dividends are taxed along with other income at various income levels for 2013/2014. Dividend Splitting Shifting Transferring dividends to another person to utilise their personal allowance, basic rate bands and/or CGT exemption can be attractive. We look at when and how you can do this in detail. Using a Company To Avoid Income Tax on Dividends Individuals can be taxed on dividends at up to 30. 55, whereas companies can usually receive dividends free of tax. We look at how you can use company ownership to reduce tax on your dividends. Using ISAs To Reduce Tax ISAs are one of the most effective tax planning structures for small investors. We...
