He then looked at Jupiter and saw a wonderful sight. The great planet had four moons traveling round it, just in the same way that the earth and planets travel round the sun. He was delighted with this important discovery, and many people went to look at Jupiter through his telescope. He wrote a book, but as the most powerful people at that time did not believe in his theories he was made a prisoner. As his life was in danger unless he denied that the earth moved, the poor old man was obliged to say he might be wrong. He was set at liberty, but his sight began to fail, and for five years before his death he was blind. He lived to be nearly eighty years of age.--From School Education. LESSON II The Evening Stae How many of the pupils, while walking home from school in the evening, have noticed a star in the sky? What is the name of that star? Where was it? Ask the pupils to notice the star that rises higher and higher and passes to the west. Show them how to find the star on the map, the chart, or the atlas. Mercury was the evening star on December 20th, and Venus and Jupiter morning stars. Call the pupils attention to Venus or Jupiter, and notice that each changes its position among the other stars. Both rise after midnight in December. Jupiter may be seen about...
